

Academic Year 2024-2025

Syllabus

Course: Global History CFU 6

Prof Valeria Zanier and Prof Raimondo M. Neironi

Course Description

The course will investigate some of the main features of global governance in a historical perspective, considering its evolution in the period 1945-2008 – from the aftermath of WWII to the global financial and economic crisis of 2008. The course aims at providing some of the factual grounding and conceptual apparatus necessary to better understand contemporary politics, world's governance and its challenges.

Students will be guided through the onset, changes, and evolution of the international arrangements made to govern political and economic relations (e.g.: international organizations, international regimes and agreements, regional organizations). A constant highlight of the course will be the visions and interests shaping the global governance along its evolution, as well as the key actors imposing, shaping or challenging the governance rules and structures.

The course will address the role of Western Europe in the changing and globalizing world, it will qualify its place in the development of hegemonic powers and alternative visions of how to run the world politically and economically. In addition to the Cold War hegemons that shaped the post-1945 global governance (USA and USSR), the course will shed light on the last 40 years' process that projected the People's Republic of China (PRC) to the current economic and political superpower, exploring the evolution of its relationships with Asia, Africa and the global governance institutions.

Teaching Method

The course will combine lectures with seminar activities. Lectures will provide students with the necessary information and reading guidelines of the phenomena under scrutiny, while seminars will see students critically engaging with this knowledge and promoting/participating in class debates. Students are expected to attend every class, come prepared to class, and participate in discussions.

Seminars include in-class assessed presentations and a final debate:

Assessed individual presentation: Each student will give one individual assessed presentation in which they shall critically assess the content and argument of a chosen reading from a given list and introduce related questions for class discussion.

Assessed group presentation: Small groups (4 or 5); instructions and topic(s) to be communicated at the beginning of the course;

Final debate: At the end of the course teachers will organize a final debate. Each student shall participate in it offering their critical arguments on the topics of discussions on the base of all what they learned throughout the course and via the previous assessed talks. Key debate questions will be pre-circulated by the professors.

Assessment

Attending students → There is no final exam

In-class individual presentation (45%)

In-class group presentation (35%)

Participation in the final in-class discussion (20%)

Non-attending students → Oral exam (100%)

Non-attending students shall register in Delphi for the additional exam sessions in 2025 (Winter; Autumn). They will have to study one academic article and one book in their entirety:

They shall contact both Prof Zanier and Prof Neironi (together in a single email) well ahead of the exam date to receive instructions for preparing the oral exam.

Students will be notified of their non attendance status soon after the end of classes. Those who will result non-attendant will automatically lose all the work that they contributed in the framework of the permanent evaluation activities (individual presentation, group presentation, debate).

The article:

Students will critically assess the content and argument of an academic article chosen from a list. Moreover, they will contextualize the reading across the broader questions addressed in the course.

The book:

Students will thoroughly read the book by D. Jain, Women, Development, and the UN: A Sixty-Year Quest for Equality and Justice, Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2008.
