

İlayda Eskitaşcioğlu is a human rights lawyer based in İstanbul, Turkey. She graduated from Bilkent University's Faculty of Law and Leiden University's European and International Human Rights Law Advanced Studies Master's Programme. She is an attorney at law at Ankara Bar Association and is currently a PhD student researching on international human rights law at Koç University. She is a Stanford University AMENDS Fellow and she is an active G(irls)20 Ambassador. She is the founder of We Need to Talk, an NGO which aims to empower rural women in Turkey, through providing them access to menstrual products and destroying the stigma around menstruation. We Need to Talk has been chosen for Sabancı Foundation Turkey's Changemakers program in 2020. Her academic interests are international human rights law, business and human rights, gender equality, sustainable development, women's sexual and reproductive rights, and child labour. She has been recently chosen as a member of UN Women's Beijing +25 Global Youth Task Force and as one of the 17 Young Leaders for Sustainable Development Goals by the United Nations.