

Elisabetta Mannoni is a Postdoctoral Researcher in Political Science at the University of Siena and an Adjunct Professor of Research Methods at LUISS University Rome. She obtained her PhD in Comparative Politics from Central European University in Vienna and has held visiting positions at the European University Institute and New York University. Her research interests include political psychology, public opinion, political behavior, and survey methodology. She is the 2024 recipient of the Roberta Sigel Award from the International Society of Political Psychology. Her work has been published in international journals such as Government and Opposition, Parliamentary Affairs, British Journal of Politics and International Relations, Representation, Contemporary Italian Politics, Italian Political Science Review, and Swiss Political Science Review, among others.