

Jessica Tillipman is Associate Dean for Government Procurement Law Studies at The George Washington University Law School, where she teaches and writes on government contracts, anti-corruption, and AI procurement governance. She also advises governments, international organizations, and industry on public procurement and AI policy. Her recent work examines how the U.S. government's accelerated acquisition of artificial intelligence is outpacing its governance infrastructure, as well as the risks of relying on bilateral procurement agreements to regulate artificial intelligence.
