The project developed the understanding of the economic dimension of the development of the European territory. That includes identifying the spatial pattern of company/investment locations and the factors influencing these patterns and looking from a policy perspective identifying the key measures having impact on these patterns. The policy perspective addressed both measures undertaken at EU level in terms of defining the overall conditions of the internal market and related EU regulation of economic factors, and the conditions and policy impacts created by national, regional and local actors in order to attract companies/investments to a particular location. Based on a multi-scalar approach, conclusions regarding the territorial impacts of EU economic policies and location of economic activities in Europe are developed as well as policy recommendations in support of territorial cohesion.

LP of ESPON 3.3 joined the geoland consortium as full member as European user organisation.

Geoland was an Integrated Project within the European Commission's Sixth Framework Programme (FP-6), Priority AERO-2.2 - Aeronautics and Space, which ran from 2004-2007. It involves 56 partner organisations across the European Union, such as for example the United Nations, Space Research Institute of Russian Academy of Science and the Environment Agency. The project aimed to provide and establish geo-information products and services to support the European Global Monitoring for Environment and Security programme using Earth Observation resources and integrating them with existing models into pre-operational end-user applications.

The Spatial Planning Observatory, one of six observatories within geoland, introduced innovative Earth Observation derived information products for use in spatial planning at European, national and regional levels. CUDEM provided the lead on European-wide policy inputs in the Spatial Planning Observatory.

Coordinator for Piano Territoriale Provinciale Generale (PTPG - General Provincial Territorial Plan) of Province of Rome: methodology for planning metropolitan area of Rome Capital city.

The planning methodology treats the territorial plan as a project of work, premising to it the analysis of environmental compatibility. This occurs through the evaluation of: the impact of planning choices on the environment (milieu plus environment) in terms of ex ante potential scenarios of the endogenous mutations at which the local systems would be subjects facing the insertion of new occasions of economic development; the degree or the ability of the territorial context to back down in partial equilibrium regenerating resources to employ in the future after the planning intervention, coherently with the level of the study, drawing corrective hypothesis. The Plan is composed by: 528 maps (up to date at 2000), 5 reports, Total Quality plan.

The future of numerous rural areas is functionally increasingly interlinked with urban development in terms of flows, exchange processes, institutional links and interdependencies. Future perspective for urban-rural relationships include options for mutual exchange, where cities provide services, cultural activities, infrastructures and major access to the labour market, while rural areas, apart from producing agricultural products, provide leisure potential and green spaces. The main output was a European typology of urban-rural relationship giving information that could inspire co-operation in support of sustainable development of rural areas and urban-rural partnership in building rural development dynamics.
