

29 years old, Italian, EEBL student between 2010 and 2012.

I chose this master programme as I considered it a very good way to enrich my academic background and to launch my professional career being an international course that combines both multidisciplinary and rigor.

I chose EEBL as I was fascinated by the chance to study in a dynamic and vibrant city like Rome and to be part of a programme thought for international students. The quantitative knowledge acquired at EEBL and the wide outlook on European markets and institutions turn out to be very useful for my professional background and instilled in me the desire to remain closely related to the academic environment.

Indeed, after this experience I decided to do another M.Sc. in Economics at University Paris Sorbonne and I enrolled in a Ph.D. in Management at University LUISS Guido Carli in Rome. But the sound knowledge in European public economics acquired at Tor Vergata was particularly useful also from a professional point of view as it allowed me to work first in the project management of European funded projects for a consultancy company, then in the public procurement sector for Consip, the Italian central contracting authority, and lastly in the financial management of rural projects financed by United Nations for IFAD.

EEBL experience contributed to my personal growth allowing me to improve my knowledge of English language and nurturing my curiosity to explore other domains of economics and management and to keep studying other languages.
